The nuns at Dolma Ling Nunnery and Institute have been keeping cows for over 20 years.

The nunnery's small herd of dairy cows provide the main kitchen with milk and butter for the 250 nuns who live and study there. The dairy herd also provides manure for the nunnery's flourishing vegetable and flower gardens. The cows are an important aspect of the nunnery's sustainability efforts.

The nuns need help to build a new 45-meter cow fence for the lower boundary of the nunnery. This fence will keep the cows and calves safe and contained. It will also be an important demarcation of the nuns' land.

The fence will serve a dual purpose: it will keep the cows from straying onto other people's land and will prevent any disputes about the nunnery's own boundary.

PROJECT COST: US $2,200

Help keep the nuns' cows safe and mark the nunnery boundary!
