It's exam time! This summer, dozens more Tibetan Buddhist nuns will sit various levels of their rigorous four-year Geshema exams. All being well, there will be 8 new Geshema graduates this autumn.

The Geshema exams are once again being held at Dolma Ling Nunnery and Institute for two weeks in August. All the nuns taking exams will gather one month in advance to study together and make their final exam preparations.

We need help to cover the costs of travel for the nuns to and from Dolma Ling and for their food during their 6-week study and exam period.

The Geshema degree (or Geshe degree for monks) is roughly equivalent to a Ph.D. in Tibetan Buddhism. This highest degree was, until recently, only open to men. Now Tibetan Buddhist nuns are making history. In the last two years, 26 Tibetan Buddhist nuns have earned this degree.

The Geshemas are paving the way for other nuns to follow in their footsteps. This degree will make them eligible to assume various leadership roles in their monastic and lay communities reserved for degree holders and hence previously not open to women.

Help the nuns earn their Geshema Degrees!
