PROJECT DESCRIPTION

When it rains at Dolma Ling Nunnery, it pours! The area around Dharamsala in northern India where the nunnery is located has one of the heaviest monsoons in India.

The nunnery was planned and constructed with careful concern for the natural environment and dedication to creating a natural peaceful garden in which the nuns can live and study. The nuns work hard to preserve the natural resources and to maintain the streams, which run through the nunnery property delighting residents and visitors alike.

However, during heavy monsoon rains and other downpours, the drainage system that runs throughout the nunnery, takes a battering and needs to be regularly repaired. In 2017, during the monsoon, the stream and drainage channels, which run past the cow barn and behind the medical clinic and guesthouse, became seriously eroded. The drainage system needs to be sealed to prevent water seeping out onto the paths and to prevent flooding.

We urgently need to do this work before the start of the next rainy season to avoid further damage.

We need your help to prevent flooding at Dolma Ling Nunnery.
